ALMA MATER

Sweet be thy memory,
High School of ours,
Fair be thy destiny,
Fadeless thy flowers;
Hearts that have loved
thee have won in life's fight.
Names that we honor,
thy standards hold bright.

Our Alma Mater dear,
to thee we sing,
May all thy future years
new honors bring.
May friends thy banner raise,
thy foes grow less,
All love and praise to our old E. H. S.

FOREWORD

The Orient Staffs of 1938 have tried to take the essence of East High's life and condense it, altering no ingredient, adding no foreign element. Let this book be East High itself, so that when East High and you have parted, there shall exist a tangible bond between the school and you.

Therefore,

The Orient for 1938, presents this pictorial representation of the school year divided into the following sections:

ALBERT H. WILCOX, A.M., L.H.D.
Principal

To Mr. Wilcox, who graciously conveys the impression that we are the only class to have confronted him with the weighty problems connected with school life, and who has made our sojourn at East High both pleasant and worth while, we dedicate this edition of the "Orient."

Inasmuch as this year completes Mr. Wilcox's thirty-fifth year of continuous service at East High, we feel it is appropriate to present a short history of our school, a history that will give an overview of East High throughout its thirty-five years of existence.

HISTORY OF EAST HIGH

Eighteen ninety-eight: Conditions in the Rochester schools were so disgraceful, so poor, that the boys and girls studying in the schools protested, the adult citizens agitated, and Governor Theodore Roosevelt threatened to withhold the State monies if something were not done about the situation quickly. The inadequacy had developed because of an antiquated system of arrangement of the Board of Education. Each ward had one representative on the Board, supposed to see to it that his ward was taken care of properly in matters educational. This kept the board from having an integrated view of the city's needs, and fostered rivalry and incompetence.

The Rochester High School building was especially bad. Agitation for a new high school building was being carried on by almost all citizens, supported by the local newspapers. The school paper, the "Clarion," published by the pupils of the Rochester High School, published an editorial describing their school building on South Fitzhugh Street in these terms: "The faults of the school are so obvious that anyone enjoying the use of his eyesight can see at a glance what an antiquated, badly planned, poorly lighted, illy ventilated, tottering unsanitary monstrosity this building is." There was no gymnasium, lunchroom, or assembly hall. The staircases were perpendicular, poorly lighted, dangerous. In fact, there was an elevator in use for those delicate girls who were unable to climb the stairs. In general, everyone was agreed upon the need for a new school.

Determined to accomplish the renovation of the school system, Dr. Andrew J. Townson, president of the Board of Education, initiated a new form of Board. Five representatives were elected from the city at large, eliminating the old narrowness of view. The new board was more efficient and cooperative. After a great deal of discussion, it was decided to build two new high schools. This extravangance was roundly denounced by those citizens who could not see the need, then or in the future, of more than one high school. Since East High was to be built first, a location as near central as possible, to be convenient for all pupils until West High should be built, was chosen. Mr. Albert H. Wilcox, who, after graduating from the University of Rochester, had recently completed extension work at the University of Chicago, was brought to Rochester in 1900 to be principal of the Rochester High School.

The Construction of East High School was begun in 1901. It progressed at a normal pace until April, 1903. At that time the finishing touches were being put on it. However, conditions at the old school had become so bad that it was decided that the difficulties encountered in staying there were greater than would be those connected with moving into the unfinished building. Accordingly, 2100 students moved into an unfinished building, finding, as Mr. Wilcox has phrased it, that "masons to right of them, plumbers to left of them, electricians in front of them volley'd and thunder'd!" Twenty-one hundred students, in a building built to accommodate a thousand and eight! The library, gymnasium and lunchroom were items which had not been considered in the original plan of the school. However, Mr. Wilcox was able to persuade the Board of Education that these facilities were entirely necessary. They were, therefore, incorporated into the plans. The library, which was located in a small room in the office, contained few books, which were to be in the charge of Mr. Wilcox's secretary. There were accommodations for a thousand bicycles, since most students and teachers rode them to school in those days. The new school was regarded as a marvel of perfection, and visitors from all parts of the United States came to be shown around it.

The subjects taught had all an academic aim. There was no shop, no commercial work, and practically no art or music. The girls were provided with a regular gymnasium teacher hired by the Board, but the boys were for the most part taught their gym work by University of Rochester students. Once a week the girls had a choir practice under the direction of the chemistry teacher. As a result of the students' effort—and willingness to pay—an orchestra leader was hired.

Extra-curricular activities were not encouraged by the Board of Education then as they are today. The Students' Association financed all the student enterprises. The debating team and the Roman State, which was founded in 1905 by Dr. Gray, were among the more active clubs at the beginning of East High. There were no departmental or club newspapers, but the Roman State and the German Club instead preempted a page of the "Clarion." The "Clarion" was a twelve-page newspaper published each week by the students. It was financed entirely by the pupils, through advertising and sales. The average cost of publishing it at this time was $70 an issue; the price, 5c.

Because dramatic productions were considered disorganizing to school life, the assembly platform had been built expressly for speaking purposes. However, the senior classes, wishing to present senior plays, rented the Lyceum Theater for their production. Besides enterprising thus, the class of 1904 decided, within six weeks of graduation, that they wanted to publish an annual. Because of the shortness of the time to the end of the term, it was thought to be impossible. The class did edit an Orient. It is an interesting book. The first page announces that the Harvard Livery Stables are the best in Rochester. The practice of printing a separate picture of each senior had not yet started, and the seniors were pictured en masse. Group pictures of the clubs, fraternities, sororities, athletic teams, and the faculty were printed. There was also a special literary section in the book. The six weeks spent in preparing it must have been exceptionally full for those on the staff.

Track, baseball, football, and basketball were the original sports. The teams' schedules included high schools in Western New York and the freshmen teams of the University of Rochester and several other colleges. All the teams were supported directly by the students themselves, with no aid from the board, until 1906, when the Board first began portioning money for athletics. The Webster Avenue ball park was rented for football games. By 1909 football had grown far beyond its rightful importance. The rivalry between East and West was tremendous, extending beyond the two schools to the city at large; gamblers took it up as a ripe field for betting; and, to the boys, making the team was infinitely more important than studies or grades. So the Board of Education took a vote among the parents and found them overwhelmingly in favor of eliminating football. It was accordingly done away with. Rochester boys, savagely disgusted at this piece of effeminacy, retaliated by conducting a marbel tournament on their schools' front lawns.

Meanwhile, the library had quickly grown to proportions far beyond the capacity of the office, and had been moved upstairs into its own place, with a special librarian. The lunchroom had been enlarged, and the bicycle rooms moved to make room for it. The laboratories had doubled in size. A machine had been installed where rooms 320, 322, and 324 now are (later the shop was moved to Benjamin Franklin when that school was opened). Commercial subjects had made their appearance, led by shorthand, which arrived in 1906. The Students' Association, dying gradually since the Board of Education took over the financing of extra-curricular activities, pronounced its own funeral service and dissolved.

In 1923, East High again became so crowded that it was necessary to revert to procedure used in the Dark Ages of the old Fitzhugh Street "monstrosity."

UNIVERSITY ANNEX

Though leaky and creaky, with essence unique,
The Annex holds dear all the while.
Its head lifted high with proud memories of yore,
A martyr in true Mid-Victorian style.

The pupils were divided, half coming in the morning and half in the afternoon, with a hectic two periods near noon when all thirty-six hundred attended. There were two annexes, one on Goodman Street in an old gun factory, and one on University Avenue. This continued until 1930, when another high school opened and took many of the extra students from East High.

During this time the Social Science Laboratory was initiated, the first of its kind in the country. Clubs sprang up, clubs went on flourishing, clubs died, clubs were revived and took on new life. Fraternities and sororities were no longer recognized as part of school life by the Board. Bicycles declined in popularity with the pupils and went entirely out of favor with the faculty. Teachers and students found their ranks depleted by the war. In short, things changed, progressed, regressed, and evolved.

Since its beginning and through its growth, Principal Wilcox has guided East High. His wisdom, his patience, his tact, combined with an always modern and understanding view-point, have made the school's life the quiet, orderly, progressive one which so many take pleasure in remembering. When East High is mentioned, the spirit with which Mr. Wilcox has endowed it instantly comes to the foreground of one's consciousness. Mr. Wilcox, who built, in spirit, East High, is now retiring after thirty-five years of constructive, inspiring work. His presence will be greatly missed by all those who have had the good fortune to be associated with him.

Mr. Wilcox—Just as we'll remember him.

ADVISERS FOR JANUARY CLASS

We were excited, eager, inexperienced, full of plans, full of dreams, full of strange ideas, uncontrolled, unrestrained, undirected . . . seniors trying to start our class on an eventful journey. We imagined much but knew nothing; we were a seething mass of far-reaching and seriously conflicting plans.

Into this came our advisers . . . Miss Helma Russell, calm and not to be upset by any class ignorance; Mr. Burr F. Williams, smiling his friendly smile and willing gently to suggest the most astoundingly practical things. They sat through our hectic class-meetings—Mr. Williams quietly deprecating our wildest ideas, Miss Russell casting her skeptical eye on us and asking embarrassing questions, ferreting out fundamental difficulties in her dry, humorous, "little boy what now?" way. In short, they did what needed to be done just when it was most needed; and, most imporant to us, in a way that always was tops.

CLASS HISTORY

When we came on that first day, our outstanding characteristic was that we were young. Nothing else . . . we were just young, more or less in a state of fluidity. Our ideas were hazy and our view-point was narrowly subjective. But being young didn't keep us from being scared. We were positively petrified for the immeasurably lengthy period of two weeks. Then fright, as all things else, passed on (to return at months' ends with report cards). And in its absence we found out the horrible truths about the old annex . . . that the roof leaked and the stairs sagged and the piano in the lunchroom really wasn't supposed to be played.

At the main building we were timorous again—but not for long, happily! (Remember us acting as guides for Know Your School Week and not knowing where 334 was?) We soon took possession of the library, spoke up for seats in the lunchroom, and salvaged four of the five minutes passing-time for private use. We even studied (with exceptions)!

As juniors we were terribly gay. We joked about studies and marks and regents and all manner of hitherto stultifyingly sober things. We dashed about with inexhaustible energy; we got sorted out in our minds who did things (and who didn't) among our classmates; we adopted pet subjects; we learned to sell tickets.

And then—seniors! It seemed impossible. Gradually we took hold and began agitating for class organization. We elected officers and committees and watched them bustle importantly about. And soon our advisers, Miss Helma Russell and Mr. Burr F. Williams, more commonly called Mamma and Pappa, yielded to our pleadings and were induced to sit in on our riotous and vociferous class-meetings.

Our parties numbered one and a half—fun-full ones. Graduation was solemn, with giggles. And then it was over . . . 86 orphans! Mamma and Pappa had deserted us. This is our wail.

We are they who

CLASS OF JUNE 1938

Mr. Milton E. Woodams

Mrs. Marion F. Yerger

ADVISERS FOR JUNE CLASS

We wish to express our gratitude to Mrs. Yerger and Mr. Woodams for so admirably executing the difficult tasks that are included in the position of adviser. We had new ideas about how our class affairs should be managed; they patiently pointed out the impracticabilities of the plans. They saved us from the futile and inevitable mistakes which naturally follow a senior class's headstrong actions—mistakes which hasten the deluded senior's downfall.

For all their untiring, kind, wise, and patient efforts we thank them.

JUNE CLASS OFFICERS

Vice-President Mason, President Bradstreet, Social Chairman Fowler, Treasurer O'Connor, Secretary Zimmer.

CLASS HISTORY

In September, 1934, the Board of Education invited a group of Freshmen to run around in a new East High Annex, which had a swimming pool in the yard. We, of June '38, were these honored students who first went through the new Annex. Because the freshman class was the only one at the annex, it was not until we came to the main building that we realized fully the insignificant position of underclassmen and spent our time staring at those wonderful, distant people called seniors. A great deal of our time and energy was spent in devising daring and original methods of evading homework and skipping classes. All our plans were apprehended, and the teachers' attitudes indicated that it was all old stuff to them. As seniors we acquired officers and advisers. As most all good East High senior classes have, we invested the contents of our treasury in an old-clothes dance in the barn. Ours, however, was unique in that all those present who were not members of the class were actually politely requested to leave—and almost promptly did. At the time of the Senior Banquet there was great rejoicing by all, caused by the festive spirit as well as the thought of our coming departure. However, during the graduation ceremony, we grew fonder and fonder—in memory—of the scene of our crimes, our Alma Mater. Soon after we became full-fledged graduates, revolutionary ideas for completely changing East High came to us. Dreamily we reflected on what we should do if we were still there, but our new and idealistic plans were diverted in rapid succession to other fields. And East High remains just a memory.

We are the Seniors of June '38, who

Wail for the woes of the year-book staff! Little is known of the troubles and headaches we have to bear for we are the will-o'-the-wisps who glide mysteriously around the hall all year, telling nothing, asking much, and constantly catching you off guard with our candid cameras. If, however, this presentation shall meet your approval, our labor and toil shall be as naught for then shall we regain that peace of mind missing from our lives these many months.

JUNE ORIENT STAFF

The editors of the Orient for 1938 wish to take this opportunity to thank the members of the staff for their fine work and loyal assistance. They have worked hard and faithfully to make this book the best possible, and for their help we are deeply grateful. Also, we wish to express our heartfelt appreciation to our advisers for the helpful and welcomed suggestions and criticism they gave us. Without all these things the Orient as it is would not be possible.

The Dramatics Club, composed of the school's best talent, produces one or two plays a year in place of former senior plays. This year's offering was "Growing Pains," a farce on adolescence which, magnificently produced, played before a packed house.

DEPARTMENT HEADS

Mention of East High invariably brings to mind the high scholastic standards which it has constantly exemplified over the period of the last 35 years. From its very beginning East has been noted for the superlative quality of its graduates, men and women who have striven for and reached the peaks in vocations as varied as the day is long. Word quickly spread to various colleges about the splendid work being carried on here under Mr. Wilcox's genteel supervision, and to-day it can safely be stated that East High enjoys as sound a scholastic reputation as any comparable institution.

Such a record must of necessity be based on a firm foundation, a solid base that can withstand the trials of petty differences and the revolutionary changes which time effects, and in our case the department heads and various faculty members have furnished this corner-stone, our lot having been extremely fortunate throughout the years for the high caliber of the many persons who have been connected with the staff of our school. Many of them stand out through their contributions to contemporary education—Dr. Grey for his extensive Latin and Greek research; Mr. Betz for his mathematical ingenuities; Ernest R. Clark for advancement in the study of English; and innumerable others.

While memories of glorious past experiences are exhilarating in themselves, true satisfaction can come only from continuance of past high standards, a statement that needs no qualification at East. For with us, the past stands out in triumphant review, the future lies thrillingly ahead. Under the competent guidance of these department heads, the keynote for to-morrow shall be "New Goals; New Worlds to Conquer."

How many of the present faculty members can you recognize without looking at their names? Probably not many; for our best total was only 15. But after all they're really the same persons; although perhaps they were a wee bit younger then and of course their styles of clothing were somewhat different. Yes, styles were quite a bit different as you can easily notice by close inspection. Mr. Foster was still a hold over from the high collar era of the early nineteen hundreds; while Mr. Partridge was sporting a shaggy moustache on his upper lip that gave him every bit the mien of one of the shadowy villains so common to early movies. And just imagine. To-day Mr. Partridge is a Justice of the Peace. Don't tell anybody, but if you'll look closely near the center of the picture perhaps you can even find Mr. Baird. This was the first year he taught here; and, miracle of miracles, he wore only a size 13 collar. As for hair styles, let your conscience be your guide. Bushy mats of wool seemed to be the fashion then, but who are we to laugh at others? Our modes are theoretically just as ridiculous as theirs; only with us the trend is toward a minimum rather than toward a maximum.

Thus was the faculty of 1915. Laugh a little if you must, but please don't kid the teachers too much about their pictures; for, as every senior comes to realize, our teachers are much more than teachers. They are really our ever-present comrades whose influence reaches on with us ad infinitum into the mysterious years ahead.

A Lamp Students Will Appreciate

To a swell Kid
Samuel Tripi

Who, better than a student, can appreciate the advantages of good lighting? Students also know the price which must be paid for carelessness in our seeing tasks.

Many homes do not have the excellent lighting which is often found in our better schools and colleges. Students find out the difference when home-work has to be done.

If your home needs better lighting for study work, you will find the I. E. S. lamp just the "ticket."
Why not come in and see them on our Main Floor.

1863—DIAMOND JUBILEE—1938

What It Means to You

When a person has passed the age of three-score-years-and-ten we look for a gradual breaking up, a lessened interest and youthfulness.

RBI would not mention its Diamond Jubilee if it had any notion that age of an institution can be compared to that of a person.

New blood and new ideas have been injected as needed. RBI, though, has never wavered from the route it mapped out during the days of the Civil War.

RBI is constantly abreast of the times—ready to help you lay a foundation for your business career as it has helped 63,000 to Balanced Business Training and good jobs.
